Vietnam does not have a diaspora engagement policy.

Terminology: Viet Kieu refers to Vietnamese people living outside of Vietnam; those who left Vietnam prior to the Vietnam war, those who left as refugees during the war or the newer immigrants who grew up post-war. The term is used by people in Vietnam to refer to ethnic Vietnamese living outside the country.

Overview of the policy and legislative framework

1986 • Doi Moi reforms was a set of economic reforms to transition Vietnam from a command economy to a socialist market economy. The reforms saw the Vietnam government loosening up control of foreign trade and allowing consumer goods to be sent back home by Vietnamese who worked or studied in other socialist countries. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, the reforms emphasised that in a post-communist market economy, Vietnam should continue to keep its door open to foreign trade and investment.

2004 • Resolution 36 was a law on the rights of the Viet Kieu, entitling them to certain privileges, such as incentives to buy property and invest in business and an exemption from visas. It was the first resolution of the Communist Party of Vietnam that addressed Viet Kieu issues. It aimed at creating favourable conditions and supporting them to “stabilise their life, integrate into the society of residing countries and maintain close links with the homeland”. As a result of this law, important legislation, such as visa exemption, home ownership, single price system and dual nationality, have subsequently been passed.

2018 • Law on Vietnamese Nationality encourages and creates favourable conditions for persons of Vietnamese origin residing abroad to maintain close relations with their families and homeland and contribute to the building of their homeland. It also protects the lawful rights of Vietnamese citizens abroad through domestic state agencies and overseas Vietnamese representative missions.

Trends and achievements

The legal framework for diaspora engagement in Vietnam is not very developed. However, the government has increasingly recognised the critical importance of diaspora engagement through activities that promote Vietnamese culture and the provision of incentives to attract the diaspora back home. Incentives include facilitating buying property and investing in businesses, visa exemption, allowance for dual nationality and a single price system. Through such measures, Vietnam has benefitted from economic growth. In the early 2000s, there were only 50 listed companies in Vietnam, whereas today there are over 750 companies with market capitalisation of around $150 billion.

Vietnam has also focussed heavily on promoting its culture to the diaspora by inviting them to summer camps or cultural programmes in Vietnam. The private sector is also tapping into the fact that many overseas Vietnamese - encouraged by the government’s fight against Covid-19 - wish to come home. Companies are using this opportunity to encourage diaspora with academic qualifications and experience working in leading multinational corporations to return and work in Vietnam’s growing economy.

Obstacles

• Lack of policy framework: Vietnam lacks an overall policy framework for diaspora engagement, which prevents the various government ministries and private sector companies from working together more coherently. It also means that there is a lack of an overall guidance on what should be done to better the government’s diaspora engagement.

- Divisions within the diaspora: More than 45 years after the Vietnam War, the Vietnamese diaspora remains divided due to the country’s complex tapestry of migration.

- Emphasis on financial linkages: The State Commission for Overseas Vietnamese (SCOV) has focussed mainly on establishing financial linkages to Vietnam to speed up national development, but has not put in place activities or policies to heal emotional and political scars.

SPOTLIGHT: effective practices

Come Home Pho Good

The programme aims to attract high-skilled Vietnamese talent from the diaspora. Increased demand for talented professionals makes private sector companies keen to recruit from overseas Vietnamese professionals because they have a wide exposure to international experience and technology. The programme seeks to convince companies to attract Vietnamese diaspora professionals and provide the mechanism for companies to secure talent. For instance, the recruitment agency Robert Walters identifies and connects with Vietnamese diaspora professionals who are keen to return and potentially interested in jobs in Vietnam, based on their extensive database.

Vietnam Summer Camp annual since 2004

The SCOV organises an annual camp in 10 localities across the country at which the diaspora comes to Vietnam to pay their respects to former President Ho Chi Minh at his mausoleum in Hanoi and visit other cultural and historical sites across Vietnam. There are also social activities, such as presenting gifts to relatives of martyrs, orphans and children in need, and interacting with local Vietnamese in several provinces. Since 2004, the camp has attracted 2,000 members of the diaspora from 30 countries and gives them a chance to connect with other Vietnamese in Vietnam and the diaspora.

Xuan Que Hong (Homeland Spring) Programme annual

The Homeland Spring Programme brings together Vietnamese diaspora from around the world to strengthen solidarity between them and people in the homeland. It also seeks to inspire national pride and reiterate traditional cultural values amongst the diaspora. The programme includes a day of various activities, such as incense offering, ceremony for peace, and a food festival.

Trip to Truong Sa (Spratly) archipelago Since 2011

This trip brings Vietnamese diaspora to the archipelago in the East Sea, which is also the nation’s sacred territory. In 2019, the eighth such visit welcomed 50 diaspora members from 19 countries. The visitors attended commemorations events of martyrs and also donated gifts of essential food, equipment and cash to the soldiers and people in Truong Sa.
