Terminology: The idea of diaspora is captured in the 2013 Ley de Protección de los Hondureños Migrantes y sus Familiares as it refers to “hondureños residentes en el exterior.” It also refers to the diaspora concept as “hondureño migrante” which is the term used by some government entities (e.g. Dirección General de Protección al Hondureño Migrante).

Honduras does not have a diaspora engagement policy.

¹ Constitución de la República de Honduras, 1982. Article 28 provides that no Hondurans citizens by birth may be deprived of their nationality, even when they acquire another nationality.

² Ley Especial para el Ejercicio del Sufragio de los Hondureños en el Exterior Decreto No.72-2001

Overview of the policy and legislative framework

- 2009 ● Visión de País 2010-2038 and Plan de Nación 2010-2022: The national development plan prioritises the issue of return and reintegration of migrants among those who left the country but were detained at US borders. The plan offers a commitment for decent employment opportunity to help reintegration upon return. The plan makes no mention of the importance of migrants and remittances for the country.
- 2013 ● Ley de Protección de los Hondureños Migrantes y sus Familias: This Act is a comprehensive legislation aimed at protecting migrants abroad. It promotes - among other things - the reduction of financial and other costs associated with remittances, and aims to strengthen the cultural, social and economic position of Honduran migrants. It creates the National Council to Protect Honduran Migrants and stipulates measures to coordinate among government agencies on issues of rights protection.

» Trends

Honduras migration is relatively new, mostly a phenomenon resulting from Hurricane Mitch in 1998 when a large out-migration wave occurred, growing at an annual 7% rate. With the 2009 military coup and the global recession, a new wave later emerged, exploding in 2014 with thousands of unaccompanied minors leaving Honduras to the US. Because migration is a relatively new trend, diaspora communities are less established and there is less of a collective diaspora identity than evident in other nations.

Even though there are some institutions and programmes related to diaspora engagement and leveraging remittances for development should be a point of convergence between the diaspora and the government, the government has not engaged as effectively with its diaspora as it could have. The main reason is that Honduras prioritises the challenges posed by significant outmigration. The government chooses to focus on those returned or deported by the US government, with its policies addressing mainly outside pressures.

Lately the country has started to recognize prominent Hondurans in arts, entrepreneurship, international business and social enterprise. However, when it comes to science diasporas, there is no official or centralized database built by any public institution even though they have shown willingness to transfer knowledge back to their country of origin.³

Achievements

In 2016 Honduras signed several multilateral and bilateral agreements on migration, such as a Memorandum of Understanding on labour cooperation with Mexico, El Salvador and Guatemala. It also signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the United States of America to protect Honduran migrant workers against discriminatory practices.

A relevant fund, Fondo de Solidaridad con el Migrante Hondureño (FSMH, 2017-2019), was established as a result of a reform to the Ley de Protección de los Hondureños Migrantes y sus Familias by decree No. 15-2015. The last allocation for this fund was approved in 2019. The funds financed returned migrant care centres, social and labour reintegration programmes, the strengthening of Honduran consulates, non-profit organisations and the “Centro Consular de Protección al Migrante Hondureño”. It also provided direct help to Hondurans for their voluntary return and, when requested by the consulates, helped Hondurans deprived of liberty, provided hospital and medical aid and assistance in death or illness due to natural catastrophes and also supported the repatriation of bodies in case families did not have financial resources.

Depending on the case, aid applications were submitted to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, the consulates or the Dirección General de Protección al Hondureño Migrante.⁴

Obstacles

- Lack of data: There is a lack of information on and analysis of the characteristics and development potential of Hondurans living abroad and statistics on the impact of remittances.⁵ With the foundation of the Observatorio Consular y Migratorio de Honduras (CONMIGHO) in 2015, the government has made a significant advance in statistical registration and helped close the gap. However, they still argue for the need to collect better information.
- Resource limitations: Due to their institutional and financial weaknesses, diaspora organisations lack resources (financial and organisational) and knowhow. Much diaspora-led work is run on donations and focuses on cultural and social activities, but there is no coordination structure. As a result, the government does not have a structured way to engage with these organisations.
- Lack of programmes to build ties with the diaspora: There are no formal programmes to build or preserve ties with the Honduran diaspora.⁶ Efforts were made through the Programa de Remesas Solidarias but since 2017 there are no further developments.⁷
- The Honduran diaspora is weak overall due to its relatively recent development. Nevertheless, it seeks to materialise its links with Honduras through cultural or philanthropic activities, or even reaching out to government officials. However, trust in the home country government is a latent issue.

SPOTLIGHT: effective practices

Assisting returning migrants 2011

In 2011, the Asociación Hondureña de Instituciones Bancarias (AHIBA) initiated the “Friends of the Migrant Project”, a corporate social responsibility initiative which includes assistance on: awareness raising and education of migrants and their families on the proper use of remittances; encouraging saving practices; holding a semi-annual running event to raise funds for returned migrants with disabilities.

AHIBA and the Instituto Nacional de Formación Profesional (INFOP) of Honduras, signed a Cooperation Agreement in 2012, through which they offer training with an entrepreneurial approach to promote entrepreneurship to deportees. AHIBA’s participation is considered strategic as financial inclusion strategy to help returnees, mainly in terms of access to housing and productive assets.⁸

is an entity operating on the basis of an agreement between the Scalabrinian Sisters Association/Catholic Church, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the Secretariat of Foreign Relations and International Cooperation of Honduras. Their main goal is to provide immediate assistance (food, lodging, transportation, and health) to returned migrants from the United States and to promote their full reintegration through technical training and relocation for new jobs. In 2019, more than 60,000 Hondurans benefited from this initiative, 14,000 of them were minors.⁹

REMITTANCES

Solidarity and Productive Remittances Programme 2010

The Programme, launched in 2010 and resumed in 2015 until end of 2017¹⁰ was an initiative supported by the United Nations Development Programme to support 17 community development projects.^{11,12} These projects included diaspora cash donations to schools and community centres in the cities of Comayagua, La Paz e Intibucá that were matched by the government.

EDUCATION

Programme Becas 20/20 2017

It encourages Honduran students to continue their studies abroad under the condition of returning to the country. In 2021 the programme was only supporting health students as a response to the COVID 19 pandemic.¹³

HONDUFUTURO Labor Intermediation Program

RETURN

The objective is to be the bridge between beneficiaries and companies and governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as to provide our beneficiaries with the tools that will enable them to find the best job options in the country. The PIL seeks to support beneficiaries in their individual labor transition strategy that involves returning to the country after completing their graduate studies. The Credit-Scholarship Program also offers financing of up to $50,000 over two years and a scholarship of up to 50% to students pursuing graduate studies abroad.¹⁴
