Voting from abroad:

At embassies/consulates

Terminology: The term 'Batswana in the diaspora' is used in official documents to refer to the diaspora. Batswana (pl.) - (Motswana (sing.) - means Botswanan in Setswana, one of the official languages of Botswana (the other official language is English).

Botswana does not have a diaspora engagement policy.

1 The 1998 Citizenship Act (Cap 01-01) (Act No. 8 of 1998) describes Botswanan citizenship. While children of Botswanan citizens are automatically considered Botswanan at birth and may hold dual citizenship, at the age of 21 they have to renounce one or other of their citizenships.

2 Voting rights for those living abroad are for legislative elections only. The Botswanan constitution was amended in 1997 following a referendum on electoral reform to allow Botswanan citizens abroad to vote overseas at Botswanan embassies and consulates. See: Voting from Abroad - the International IDEA Handbook

Overview of the policy and legislative framework

- 1997 ● Electoral Referendum. One significant policy shift from the government came out of the electoral referendum of 1997 which was held in response to riots in Gaborone earlier in that year. One of the questions put to voters was whether Batswana abroad should be allowed to vote.³ 70% of voters agreed, and the constitution was amended that year to enable diaspora voting in Botswanan embassies and consulates.⁴
- 2017
2023 ● National Development Plan 11 (NDP)⁵ states that a National Migration Policy will be developed during implementation of NDP 11. IOM is supporting the development of this policy, which includes labour migration components, but its current status remains unclear.⁶ The focus of this policy is on border management and controlling irregular migration to Botswana, but it will also cover issues such as emigration and brain-drain of skilled Botswanan professionals.

» Trends

Since its independence from Britain in 1965, Botswana has enjoyed strong economic growth based on mineral extraction (especially diamonds) and agriculture. Whilst there has been some migration of Botswanan workers to South Africa (the top country of destination), Botswana remains a country of immigration rather than emigration, especially for neighbouring countries.

Due to Botswana's position as a country of immigration, the emigration of Botswanans has not had a negative economic impact, even if it has faced labour shortages in certain sectors such as medicine. Until 2009, there was no medical school in the country, and this meant Botswana wanting to train as doctors migrated to South Africa, the UK or Zimbabwe to complete their medical training.⁷ Botswana thus lost health professionals to high-income countries in the face of significant shortages and a dissipating HIV and AIDS epidemic in the region.⁸ The US and the UK continue to recruit Botswanan medical professionals, even during the recent Covid-19 pandemic.⁹

These factors, with the small contribution of remittances to national GDP, has meant that diaspora engagement has not been a policy priority for successive Botswanan governments. Although diaspora voting was enacted in 1997, there is no formal diaspora policy for the country. Moreover, Botswana retains a rather unitary approach to citizenship, and does not recognise dual citizenship. Arguably, this was partly driven by concerns about political opposition from Botswana exiles.

Botswana has started to develop some services for its diaspora through embassies and consulates but these are currently limited to voter registrations and ID cards. However, recent evidence such as the Active Global Citizens campaign, shows a willingness to diversify diaspora-engagement initiatives.

Botswana continues to show interest in formally increasing their diaspora engagement. In October 2023 a study visit facilitated by the IOM took place with a delegation of Botswana government representatives to Ghana to learn about Ghana's diaspora engagement experience and policy development.¹⁰

Obstacles

- Lack of government interest: It is a common perception that Batswana in the diaspora are largely ignored by the government of Botswana, and there are few diaspora engagement initiatives.¹¹ Dual citizenship is not recognised, and there are no formal schemes to connect second and third generation Batswana diaspora with their country of origin/heritage.
- Lack of political engagement: Diaspora voter registrations has generally been low, with only 1,044 registered Batswana voters in the diaspora voting in the 2019 elections representing around 1% of the diaspora.¹² This has led to concerns that diaspora voter turnout is insufficient to justify the costs incurred to the government in enabling diaspora voting.¹³
- Lack of information: Currently, government services provided to the diaspora are limited to voter registrations and ID cards. There is little specific information available targeting the diaspora.
- Lack of employment and enterprise opportunities for diaspora professionals and entrepreneurs: There remains a lack of attractive employment opportunities for diaspora professionals, as well as a lack of targeted investment opportunities or incentives for diaspora entrepreneurs.

Active Global Citizens (AGC) campaign 2018-ongoing

Brand Botswana (part of the Botswana Investment and Trade Centre) has seen the need to engage and work with Batswana around the world to promote the country's investment potential using a unified message. In 2020 it has been using the #IAmMotswana Twitter campaign in order to help raise awareness about investment and trade opportunities in Botswana. The aim of the campaign is to reach out to the diaspora, get to know who they are and where they are, and build awareness about investment opportunities in Botswana. The campaign has carried out activities in South Africa, Zimbabwe, the UK, and UAE.¹⁴
